Day: Wednesday Date: 11-16-11 Air Time: 8:30PM

Feature Title: Interview with Melissa King, Dean of Women at the University of Virginia, on What's Love Got to Do With It?

Length: Around 5 minutes

Tease: So, what about 'love at first sight'...is it for real? The answer might surprise you. Stay put for some good insights on this and more, coming up...

Lead: A survey conducted in 2010 by Cosmo magazine suggests that 80% of guys claimed break ups should always be done face-to-face. This seems to gel with the 27% of women who admitted to being "dumped" electronically by email or text. But what is it about us that makes us want to change things up anyway, even as Christians? Are Christians who break up demonstrating weak faith when they walk away from "the one"? Who is that "one" anyway...does he or she even exist, even for followers of Christ?

Joining us now discuss this is Melissa King.

Melissa King is currently in her second year as the Dean of Women at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville. But, more importantly, Melissa became Melissa King when she said "yes" ...to me, Franklin King.

TALKING POINTS:

- Your department no doubt deals with many issues faced today by young singles, especially Christians? What are some of the challenges you see as most impacting this group?
- Why dump anyone if he or she is really the “one”? I mean, what are Christian singles saying when this happens...oops! I guess she wasn't THE one, just one of the “ones”?
- As a Christian single, how did you feel about ‘love at first sight’? Now as a married woman, what are your feelings about that concept today for 20-30 singles...does God truly have the “one” already picked out?
- Anything you'd add to this?
